THE GIRL DAVID WILL MARRY

ceremony. Some people become very nervous when the thought of church weddings pops up because this naturally will involve religion.

If David falls in love with a girl whose religion expects a church wedding, I don't think he would feel this was a problem. David has an attitude about life and people that is very simple and fair.

He believes each person should be allowed to think and feel about their religion or their God in the way they want. This is a very important thing to him—freedom in its most basic sense.

HAPPILY EVER AFTER

Although the dating and the wedding are really two beautiful experiences in themselves, their married life would have to be something that would satisfy both David's and his wife's needs.

David prefers "small town" type of living. He doesn't really care for wild night life—with discotheques and parties lasting until all hours. He is a person who enjoys quiet evenings at home, sitting in front of the fire, and talking. It would be very important for his wife to enjoy the same type of thing.

On the other hand, she shouldn't be the kind of girl who becomes so totally involved with the house that she has no time for him!
