Each month read all the fan club news about the Partridge Family right here in Cecilia Bonaduce's column!

I've come to the conclusion that waterbeds must have been invented by a man. Don't get me wrong . . . I think waterbeds are great . . . I love Danny's new one, but have you ever tried to put a sheet on one? Obviously, the genius who designed the waterbed didn't take this into consideration. It's impossible. As soon as you tuck one corner in, another corner comes loose! No wonder Danny asked me to help him! It takes a lot of people to handle the job!

While we were in Danny's room, having finally mastered the famous bed, I spotted an award hanging on the wall. It said "Good Will Ambassador From the City of Philadelphia."

"Remember when you got that?" I asked Danny.

"Sure I do!" He said, "It was the first award I ever got. I guess that's why it's my favorite. Everybody remembers their first award."

Sounds like a good idea for an article, doesn't it?—writing about everyone's first award. I thought it was, so the next day, I hopped in the car, headed for the Partridge set in hopes of finding out what everyone's first award, tribute, or gold record was!

Suzanne Crough and Brian Forster were sitting at the Partridge kitchen table, waiting to rehearse a scene when I arrived on Stage Thirty. I asked Suzanne about her first triumph!

"Last year, I was the grand marshal of a parade in Anaheim. I'll never forget that! I had so much fun!" she smiled.

Brian said that he hadn't been a Partridge long enough yet, but we're still giving him time!

I went to Shirley's dressing room to ask the million dollar question, and got this reply: "Well, I received a number of awards in high school, but I would say that my first award as an adult must have been 'Miss Pittsburgh.'"

As I left Shirley's dressing room, I passed David walking to the set. "Hi, David!" I said. "What was your first award?" I knew what he would say even before he started to answer! "Well, one of my first awards, and the most important of all, was my gold record . . . the one for 'I Think I Love You'. I was so proud when I got that!"

Susan had joined the conversation by this time and added, "I remember when I was elected a 'Christmas Belle' back in New York . . . my sister was a 'Christmas Belle' too, and we rode in the parade that year! It was one of the most exciting things I've ever done in my life! I was walking in the clouds for days afterwards, because I was so happy."

Danny was right, everyone did remember their first awards! Shirley had said, "It's one of those special things you never forget. I didn't even have to think twice! The day you receive an award, especially the very first, you're receiving an expression of love from people who love, or respect you, and that's the important thing!"

I still hadn't asked Dave Madden about his favorite tribute, and I went to his trailer to talk to him. He thought and thought and finally he laughed as he told me, "It was getting promoted from first to second grade! No one thought I'd make it, but I surprised everyone and passed! Actually it's the only 'award' I've ever gotten!"
