

Herb Mask Lifts Wrinkles-Tightens Sag

TIGHTENS SAGGING SKIN IN THESE CRITICAL AREAS

"BAGS" UNDER EYES
JAWLINE AND MOUTH CORNER SAG
CHIN DROOP, "CREPPY" THROAT

A scientist's extract from herbs and plants blended into a de-aging mask facial called "LET'S LIFT IT" is best news yet for lined, wrinkled, sagging skin. Spread on a thin film of this delightful cream. Feel skin tingle as it sets and exercises deep down to make skin look tighter in critical areas under eyes, around mouth, under chin. Rinse away in 15 minutes. Lifts blackheads, retones skin texture. Even without make-up, complexions look more clear, smooth, fresh and younger, and startling results last days.

and his newest records. Finally, his heavy schedule allowed him five weeks of glorious freedom.

Before jetting to Italy, he did several things so typical of him. First, he devoted Christmas Day to his family in Beverly Hills. His father and stepmother, Jack Cassidy and Shirley Jones, welcomed him wholeheartedly, as did their sons—thirteen-year-old Shaun, ten-year-old Patrick, and six-year-old Ryan. The gifts piled beneath a stunning yule tree were rapturously received, and after a traditional dinner David enthusiastically played ball with his stepbrothers.

The following day he flew to New York to stay that night and the next day with his mother and grandfather in West Orange, New Jersey. Returning to them and the cozy house where he lived while attending grammar school is invariably a joy.

He'd decided to hop the Atlantic the morning after that. Disaster struck when David woke hit by the flu he'd tried to deny. Determinedly, he licked it in five more days in New Jersey. He'd intended to start this year in Rome, as another fantastic landmark in his life. Instead, he celebrated New Year's Eve sentimentally with his mom and grand-dad.

To break up a longer flight, he'd planned to cross to England and stop over for a night's rest. That thought made him feel like such a seasoned traveler. It permitted the briefest dive into sightseeing then. His leap into London came later.

David was not greeted in Rome with the lavish reception that would have been arranged for him if he'd wanted it. He'd resolutely requested absolutely no publicity, so the press was not alerted and the photographers who zero in on a star didn't intrude on his vow for a vacation as himself.

If he'd been feted by Italian stars, he'd have bewildered them. Only the Burtons and Presley can match their flamboyance. In Italy presenting a Bella Figura—a beautiful front—is a passion for everybody, so the stars there vie with the wealthiest industrialists and titled folk, ceaselessly attract as much attention as possible. They dress extravagantly, depend regally upon a bowing entourage to wait on them, and sweep through the streets in the most expensive sports cars or chauffeured limousines.

David is dazzled by theatrical flair, particularly his father's. Jack Cassidy is high voltage all the time. And David's anxious to please. He's managed to achieve an overwhelming impact when actually giving a performance. But, like his generation, he isn't "on" when he can be more—himself! He shuns affectations, doesn't want to hurt anyone so is tactful in his honesty. Even with the press, David is his quiet self.

He'd rather remain silent while others sparkle if he hasn't a lot to say. He believes in doing your own thing, developing it to the hilt, not imitating others. This sincerity, of course, is irresistible.

Fashionable attire? David's dad is a peacock, he travels with a much larger wardrobe than Shirley. But David's no dude. Well-scrubbed, his clothes as clean
