DAVID
CASSIDY:
The Sportsman

David has never been the captain of the football team or a track star at school, but he's always been fantastically interested in many kinds of sports. In school he was an alert basketball player and still can hold his own with the best of them on a tennis court.

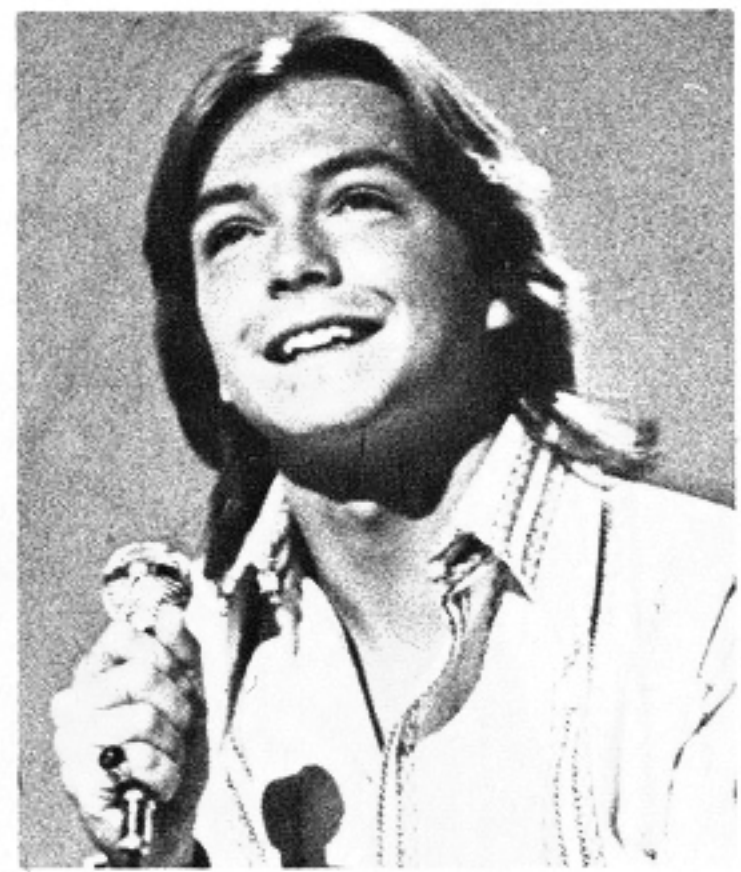

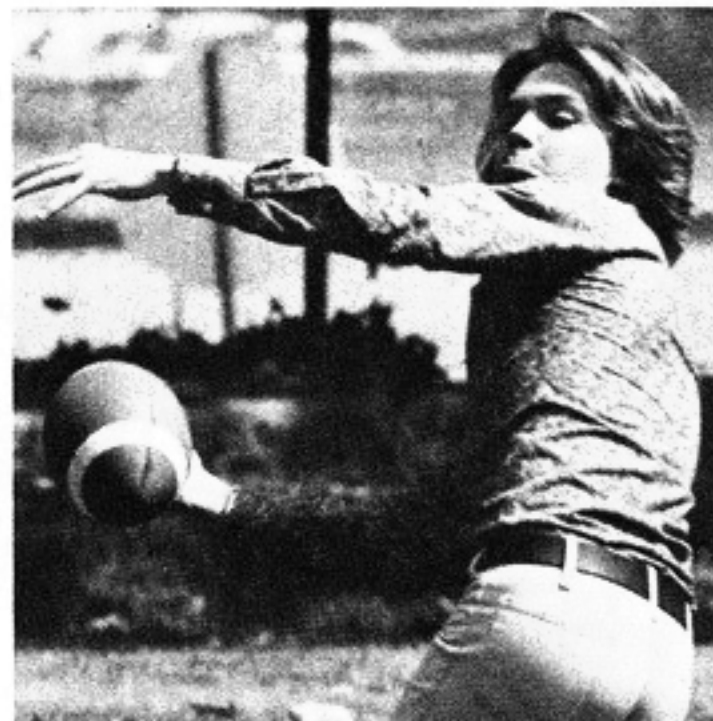

When times permits he and Sam slip away to the closest beach to go scuba diving. Some day David would like to spend three whole weeks doing nothing but exploring the ocean and practicing the art of scuba diving.

On vacations David likes nothing better than roughing it on a camping trip. He likes to pack in and not shave for weeks and hike up into obscure places where he can be alone with his thoughts. Sleeping under the stars at night in a sleeping bag is David's idea of almost heaven and waking up to the sound of distant bird whistles is the best way to wake in the mornings.

Being a sports fan is another of David's favorite pastimes. Even when he's on tour and there's a championship basketball game on TV, David won't budge from his room until the game ends. He likes watching all sports on TV but especially basketball.

David rates sports as one of the most fun parts of his life and only wishes there were more hours in the day for them.

The Cassidy household was always full of music. His mother and father were both heavily involved in the theater and musicals, but David's first real contact with it came when he was a five-year-old and a member of the church choir.

"You can listen to music and learn to appreciate it but to sing it is really something special. It taught me a great deal about expression. How you can make your feelings heard."

At first, music for David, was fun and a way to express himself. Then, the tragedy struck. David's father and mother were divorced. It was a difficult time for David. He wanted
