About The Partridge Family Right Here
In Cecelia Bonaduce's Column!

What does a Partridge do with a Turkey? Have you been wondering about that deep question? I have. After all, Thanksgiving isn't too far away. So the other day when I was over on the Partridge set, I thought I'd ask a few questions and find out just exactly what a Partridge does do with a turkey.

I talked to David first. I spotted him hanging around the water cooler between takes, so I jumped at the chance to find out what he'd planned so far. Now you would think he had decided to go to someone's house for dinner, but not this year. David's really going for the big time and he's going to cook the turkey all by himself!

That should be interesting, because we all know that David Cassidy is not the world's best known food expert. He's so busy he hardly has time to eat, let alone cook!

But David assured me that he was going to tackle the big bird and make a real all-out effort to feed his family and friends on T-Day this year. We all wish Granny Cassidy the best of luck. And whatever happens to the big roast, we know he'll enjoy the long weekend.

OLD-FASHIONED WISH

When I spotted Susan she was still chuckling over the idea of David slaving over a hot stove.

"I'm still trying to get over the time you turned on the blender to make a chocolate shake, and all the stuff inside went flying around the room," Susan laughed.

David had to join in on the joke but he confessed that he was secretly hoping no one had seen that embarrassing happening.

"Are you going to try cooking this year's feast?" David asked Susan.

Susan's face got very serious and her eyes seemed to stare off into the far distance, and after a second she said that she really wanted to go back to Mt. Kisco, New York, for an old fashioned New England Thanksgiving. She remembered that a lot of her girlhood Thanksgivings were soft and frosty and covered in the winter's first snow fall.

"But I doubt very much that I can go home. Besides, I'd miss out on the chance of a lifetime," she winked.

"What's that?" David asked, anxious to know what the big deal was.

"Why the chance to taste that delicious golden brown roast turkey you're going to be cooking this year."

We all laughed and assured David that we had loads of faith in his cooking ability.

FIND OUT SHIRLEY'S PLANS!

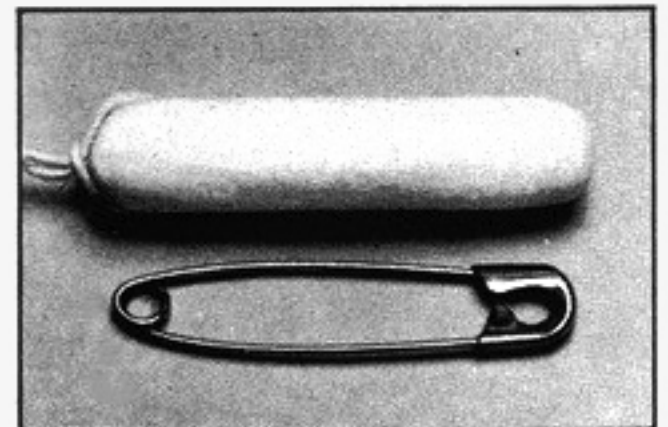

I might have known that when I asked Danny Bonaduce if he had made any plans for the last Thursday in November, that he would have made arrangements nearly a year ago.

You know how crazy Danny is about his horse, Chief? Well, he's been so busy with school and filming on the
