

RIDGES

Susan, Dave, Shirley and David take a mini-break to talk over something in the script. Shirley's handsome escort (below) is none other than her handsome 14-year-old son, Shaun.

EVERY WEEK when you tune in "The Partridge Family" on your TV, you're entertained by the fun and frolic that fills the Partridge household. But then you stop and think, "It's all rehearsed!" Well, yes it is, but that doesn't mean that the Partridges don't joke around off-camera or make far-out remarks to each other when the camera isn't rolling. Have you ever wished that you could listen in on some of their private conversations? Well, your wish is our command! Just keep reading and you can eavesdrop on the candid conversations of the Partridges!

Someone suggested to David that appearing in concerts weekend after weekend must be a drag. David disagreed. "It's a high going out on that stage. You look around and it's all there for you, people loving you like that. My friends are there with me, I'm doing what I love to do most—singing and singing for people who'd rather have me sing than anybody else in the world!" says David.

Susan Dey was asked if she had any superstitions and she replied, "Not really. I love black cats!" Her pet kitten, Sappho, is part-black, but Susan thinks that all black, Halloween-type kitties are darling.

Danny Bonaduce watched Susan eat a vegetable and fruit lunch while he calmly wolfed down a few peanut butter sandwiches. So Danny said to no one in particular, "Susan Dey's hands are turning yellow because she eats too many carrots!" Susan just looked up at (continued on page 52)
