Any Hollywood press agent, no matter who his client is, has his work cut out for him. If he handles public relations for an unknown performer, his big job is trying to get his client's name in the papers and gossip columns. If his client is a big star, somebody on the order of David Cassidy, a press agent may spend most of his time trying to keep certain things out of the paper. Some of the biggest stars lead double lives; their personalities are "split" between real life and the never-never land of publicity releases.
