the singer or actor who is red hot then? It's not much to look forward to, is it?"

This is the secret agony that grips David Cassidy, a young man who is the envy of millions. He earns $250,000-a-year after expenses, but lives on $150 a week. He receives 10,000 letters weekly, more than almost any other star in Hollywood. Certainly more than Paul Newman who once laughingly confessed, "I'm lucky if my mother writes me."

David Cassidy knows that by rights he should not be the idol of girls who are in their teens, since he actually is 21 years of age and to some preteens this is considered ancient. But David has one of those cherubic-looking faces that allows him to pass as 16-year-old Keith Partridge and the chances are when he is 30 he will look 21.

David is aware, because his advisers have constantly told him, that any sign of age on his part will be fatal to his multi-million dollar career. "David is big business," says his financial adviser Lee Bush. "He's intelligent enough to understand it will not last forever and that he must take advantage of his position now."

It has been drummed into David what has happened to teenage idols of yesteryear like Fabian, Frankie Avalon, Bobby Rydell, Rick Nelson and a host of others. They slipped in popularity when they grew older or married. Their fans even dropped them cold when they became too identified with one girl.

Fabian, the teen-age singing idol of the 50's, was getting 5,000 letters a week from girls and his clothing was ripped off him at personal appearances. Fabian got fed up and said he wanted to become an actor, not a singer, and he would go out with any girl he chose.

The outspoken Fabian's career practically ended right there. He bought out his contract from his manager and announced he was an actor. Unfortunately, the critics—and the public—disagreed.

His fans would accept him as a singer, even though he declared he had no voice. But he did not appeal to them as an actor. He appeared in a number of beach and motorcycle pictures which stimulated little interest and has now adopted his full name Fabian Forte and has announced he is ready to sing again, that is, if anyone is willing to listen.

This, too, throws a dark cloud over David Cassidy's future. Before the television series was a hit, David had acted on the stage and in several TV dramas and his talent was obvious to the critics who praised him highly. But when he achieved super-stardom through The Partridge Family his advisers decided to concentrate on his singing and his boyish appeal and not worry too much about the acting.

"I really don't knock myself out acting on the show," David admits. "After all, it's a half-hour show and there's six of us involved. And we all have to be given the chance to do our thing. It's not the kind of show where you have to display great acting talent."

Maybe not. But the show has an estimated 24,000,000 viewers—and according to the rating game that is not a large audience. The series has fourteen
