

It seems that every time Jackie make a move to protect herself, she gets into a bigger public hassel. Perhaps that's why Onassis seems to prefer ignoring the photographers.

Last summer in Tehran, Jackie seemed very aware of the public hassles. She told reporter Maryam Kharazmi: "I don't dislike reporters. It's just that I get afraid of them when they come at me in a crowd. I don't like crowds because I don't like impersonal masses. They remind me of swarms of locusts. But having been a reporter myself, I'm aware of what problems a journalist encounters."

Then she thought a little and added wistfully: "The truth of the matter is that I'm a very shy person. People take my diffidence for arrogance and my withdrawal from publicity as a sign of supposedly looking down on the rest of mankind."

Caroline, too, is a very shy person. But perhaps Jackie doesn't have to try so hard to protect her. It looks like Caroline can protect herself very well.

Last summer Caroline holidayed in Spain. She went to parties, on sightseeing sprees and to bullfights—and even fought a bull herself! And the best thing was that she did all this without a bodyguard or a photographer in sight. Very quietly, using the name "Collins," she managed to slip from spot to spot without publicity. The only time she was photographed was when a bullfighter friend asked her if she'd pose while he taught her how to fight a bull. She did it willingly.

Later, discovering the joys of almost complete anonymity, she sighed, "This is the happiest day of my life."

Perhaps if Jackie could stop worrying about Caroline so much they'd both have many more happy days.

And that would make Ari very, very happy!

in a healthy way. In high school a young man's fancy turns from thoughts of playing baseball to playing after baseball. It is a natural phenomenon to want to show off for girls and get them to more than like you. David is not unlike a million other young boys, except that he just happens to be visible to a million girls a week.

"A lot of his fan mail," a friend said, "is quite explicit about what these girls expect of him."

Of course David throws these eight cent offers into the nearest wastebasket. Law suits have not been unknown to stars in the past. He does not like to tempt fate.

He could be a multi-millionaire soon
