STARSCOPE

Reggae singer, Judge Dread, who recently made the charts with "Big Six", has had a chequered career and hasn't always worked in music. The six-foot-four native of South London has, in his time, been a bouncer, a bodyguard, a debt-collector, male model and wrestler. Quite a tough guy, don't you think?

A POEM FROM MARC

Dance the night in rags, of vineyard grey.
Move like a willow water, gushing through the gates of dance.

The chance of love in the twilight, bejewelled tassels binding the startangled skys, like a fisherman.

Motion toed, loping up the hillocks of youth, like a furry soul, drinking with your sweet springing mouth, hooded by the stream of Pan.

Then the morn and simitar rain and pain on your bruised lips like a locket, but the wine is hidden and the key is thee, and the troupe like a hoop ascends the hills like a sleep, and the day like a wheel is ever turning.

David Cassidy

Get an eyeful of the outfit David Cassidy is wearing in this picture! It's awfully flash, but you must admit that it rather suits him!

WORRIED WAYNE

If there's one thing Wayne Osmond worries about it's fans getting hurt in the crush when the Osmonds are in town.

"The last thing we want to happen is for someone to get hurt because of us — and it's happened before. There was a girl in Montreal who fell down, and before anyone could do anything the bus ran over her legs. It's just not worth it. Much as we love our fans, if just one person gets hurt, it's a disaster."

Rudolf Valentino

When your mum or gran starts screaming about your favourite stars, just show them this picture of Rudolf Valentino, heart-throb of the 1920s. Here he's pictured with Miss Norma Niblock, winner of the American National Beauty Contest in 1922. Some taste, uh!
