

SIDY

David, hurt him by scratching his face, chest and arms. Others pull his hair, and to David, that is the most painful thing in the world because he has a very sensitive scalp. If you were to pull his hair he'd probably cry. In fact, David cries easily.

To the right of David's stomach is a four-inch scar, a reminder of the time he nearly died in August, 1971. He had just played a concert in Wildwood, New Jersey and returned to Los Angeles to get some sleep. A few hours later he awoke, writhing in agony and screaming in pain. He was rushed to hospital, where they removed his gall bladder.

These days David lives in a beautiful house in Los Angeles, California. He's filled the house with his most prized and precious possessions and one day he hopes to have a wife to share it with him.

But although most girls would immediately pick David as their ideal partner, he's in no rush to settle down. Having experienced the effects of a broken marriage, David is determined that when he marries it will be for keeps.

But right now David's concentrating on nothing but work. He's always very busy, rushing from the studio set of the 'Partridge Family' to the recording studios, or trying to find time to give live performances on stage.

When he does have time perhaps he'll find the girl for him!
