

DAVID CASSIDY'S SHOCKING PUBLIC BEHAVIOR:

It's sometimes hard to remember that David Cassidy is still just a youngster.

22-year-old David Cassidy was the unassailable "Mr. Nice Guy" of the bubble gum set ever since the wildly successful Partridge Family show aired in the fall of 1970. As the boy millions of preteen girls would most like to cuddle up to, it seemed that David had it made—permanently. He was THE idol of the teenyboppers; sweet, shy, and clean as a bar of ivory soap. His young fans adored him because he was so pure and unthreatening. And then came the May issue of The Rolling Stone, an underground newspaper.

David had posed in the nude! He had talked about sex and drugs in a way that nice guys definitely do not. He had said petulantly, "I don't want to live like a glossy eight-by-ten photo anymore. . . . If I want to do (any of these things) then I should have the privilege of doing them."

He had flaunted every one of the qualities that had won the affection of his fans!
