

TAKE ME TO A PARTY

Everyone loves a party—we all do—any kind of party.

But what kind of party would you throw for your favourite star?

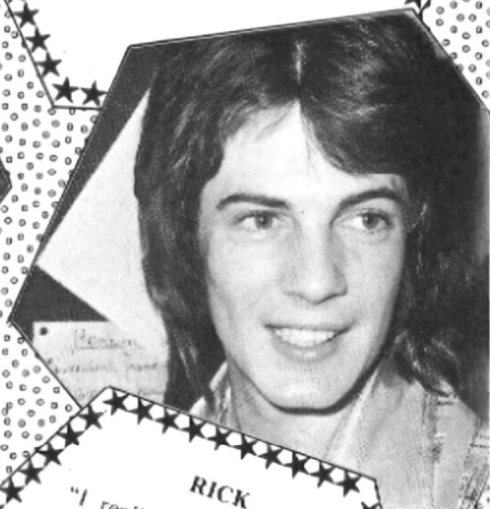

DAVID

"I hate things to be organised and planned too much, so if you were going to invite me to one of your parties, it would have to be as free and easy as possible maybe get people to come along on the spur of the moment just as they are, perhaps each person bringing something different to eat and drink. And then just letting things roll along from there."

RICK

"I really love nature, so a party in the open air would suit me right down to the ground (if you'll forgive the expression!) A picnic out in the fields or the woods would be tremendous — climbing trees, playing hide-and-seek and having a free-for-all kickabout with a ball. Then if we followed that up lazing around with lots of hotdogs and hamburgers and cider, what could be better?"

DONNY

"If I had more time to spare I would have parties all the time. I think the best kind are totally fun parties with lots of music and hundreds of party games, the sillier the better, so that everyone can get completely involved, forget about everything else and really have a good time."

ANDY AND DAVID

"Both of us play a couple of instruments each, so we like to get together with a bunch of friends and form our own band — just playing away. Of course, it doesn't matter if someone can't play, they can pick up a tambourine or something and bang it in time. And if there's a lot of soup and sandwiches at hand, that's great, 'cause we're bound to get real hungry with all that music-making."

BRIAN CONNOLLY

"I really like riding, so my idea of a perfect party would be for a gang of us to get some horses and gallop along a beach just as the sun was going down, with the sea spraying all around us. Then when the horses got tired we'd stop and have a barbecue round a huge log fire. And then before we trotted back home again we could finish off with a quick dip in the sea."
