

David takes a lot of stick from people all over the world. He takes it without flinching or blinking. "That's because most of the remarks don't mean anything," he confided in us. "They just don't matter to me." So Jean asked him what kind of things really mattered to him. He smiled softly and told us for you, from him. . .

"Everything. Really, I mean that. Just about everything in the world can really turn me on. Anything natural must be good — mustn't it!"

WHAT M TO ME

FRIENDS

"I suppose friends must be high on my list. As a star you might think I have millions of friends, but that's not true. In fact, being a star probably isolates me from other people more than if I wasn't. Real friends are hard to find. Everyone pre-tends to like me, but only because of who I am.

"True friendship is very rare and it's something I value an awful lot. I don't think I could count my real friends on the fingers of my hand!"
