David knew he would miss his family and friends—and you!

But he couldn't help himself;

something was forcing him

something he couldn't

Throughout his entire life David Cassidy has been searching. He's searched for fame and success and love and excitement and peace and fulfillment! It's been one long search after another—that's the nature of his life.

He has found many of the things he's searched for. He's got fame—his name is known around the globe. He's got success—a strong TV series, hit records and sold out concerts. He's got excitement—perhaps even more than he ever imagined was possible.

But there are two things he still searches for every day. He searches for love—true, lasting love. And he searches for paradise.

His search for love will go on until he finds that one special girl who's just right for him.

But his search for paradise may be coming to an end!

Throughout all of his travels all across the U.S. and through Europe and England, David has always kept his eyes open for one place he could call his own. He searches for a paradise where he can find peace and calm and contentment. A place where he can build a home and live his own life—a place where he can be in complete control.

His search has led him to the wide open spaces of the mid-West, the stateliness of the old Eastern cities, the glorious old traditions of the south, the natural wonders of the West and even as far away as the immense mountains of Switzerland and the holy lands of Rome, Italy.

But in all his travels only one place has caught his eye so far. Just one place has made David feel really at home. Just one place has made him look around and sigh and think of settling down.

It's a collection of islands in the tropical sun, where the people are friendly and tanned and healthy, where various sports are available year 'round, where having fun and being nice to everyone are local habits. It's a place who's history goes back thousands of years and spans many, many different cultures and races.

It's Hawaii! And David loves it! It just may become his paradise.

David first went to Hawaii when a photographer friend of his introduced him to some friends and relatives who live there and could offer David a quiet, hidden vacation—something he desperately needed.

After his first visit there, he loved the place. He loved being able to lie in the sun all day. He loved the super-friendly people. He loved everything about the place.

After that just about every vacation time he got he spent in Hawaii—except for that marvelous month-long European vacation. But even after seeing Europe, it was Hawaii that drew David back.

Just after Christmas, David had a little time off before starting on his rigorous concert schedule again and it was off to Hawaii for him.

David's trips to Hawaii now are taking on a more permanent appearance. Instead of just staying with friends and relaxing and having fun, David now spends hours looking at property and studying the expected growth of the various islands.

He's seriously considering buying land in Hawaii—his own private paradise.

He visualizes a large piece of land with a house built especially for him, with a private beach and palm trees and fresh fruit growing everywhere. The people of Hawaii have been so nice to David that he might even be able to build his paradise without putting up large fences around it as he's had to do in Los Angeles.

So David's search for paradise may be about over. All he has to do now is find that one special area of Hawaii to build his paradise in.

After then there will just be one major search left in David's life—that continuing lonely search for real love and the one special girl who'll live with him in his paradise.
