steering clear of any commitment. Certainly he's not a member of that wolf-pack that roams around the Hollywood Hills. Even though his wealth and fame would permit him to be more aggressive, more of a "let's-throw-my-weight-around" kind-of guy, David continues to be shy, soft-spoken and very, very polite to people he meets.

Rumors have mushroomed around David's search for privacy keep moving from one house to another? Why does he rent a private yacht in England instead of just staying at a hotel? Why does he hide out on Maryland estates instead of skiing and romping with the rest of the stars at popular spas like Aspen, Colorado or St. Moritz? Is David hiding a secret? Maybe he's married and hiding a bride! Rumors, rumors everywhere and no one stops to think. To think that maybe David is one of those private people who needs time alone by himself, to think, to plan, to just be with one person—himself—so that he can daydream or write a song or just relax and do nothing!

David has tried to keep his private side away from the camera but now everyone is making a big deal of why he wants to do this. Apparently it's hard for some people to realize that there comes a time for everyone who lives in the public eye, to retreat from the gaze of that eye into their own "I."

And now David's dilemma is this: he wants to leave the Partridges after this new 1973-1974 season is over. His contract has run out and he feels he'd rather devote his life to another project rather than continue the role of Keith Partridge. But that pet "project" that David desires is not getting married, setting up housekeeping with a woman, or
