

"I'll Know It's REAL LOVE When..."

cret between my love and me? It's hard to know, but however it happens, I am certain it will be the greatest moment in my life!

I see the girl of my dreams as the picture of femininity. Softness and quietness in a girl really turns me on, and I know that these are the qualities that really seem to bring out the gentleman in me.

Being out in nature will be as thrilling to her as it is to me and I'll share with her the secret dream I've had for quite some time! When I was younger I visited Yosemite National Park in California. We toured all the sights and gazed in wonderment at the incredible works of natural beauty.

I'll never forget the feeling I had when I stood at the base of Bridalveil Falls. It was springtime and the water gushed over the edge and fell in a beautiful cascade down the mountainside. As I watched I told myself, "This is where I want to be married someday!"

This will be my true love's veil—nature's own bridal veil that signifies the continuing flow of life. And there we'll linger long after our friends and relatives have said good-bye, to say the things we've saved for this blissful moment.

What will the words be? I don't know now, for they will be inspired by my love. And the words will flow from my heart and be the essence of my love for her. •

I think when the "real thing" happens to me it will be a complete shock! Does that sound funny? Well, if you knew me the way I do, you'd probably agree. I'm not the kind of person who plans things out slowly. What happens is—something pops into my head and wham! I get up and do it! You'd be surprised at the wild things I do sometimes because of my spontaneous nature!

If I had to guess, I'd say when the "real thing" happens it will be like someone hit me over the head with a hammer—one day I'll be a confirmed and happy bachelor, and the next I'll meet a special girl and we'll run off and get married.

But here's the catch—the girl I'll fall in love with on that wild, impetuous day will be one I've dreamed about for a long, long time! I'll know her in an instant and if I'm the guy she's been secretly searching for, everything will click into place. All the planning in the world doesn't mean a thing if two people don't instantly feel that magic that draws them together.

When I say I'll "know" my girl at a glance, I don't mean she'll be a tall, blonde with gorgeous legs and a sexy smile. Oh, she might be, but she might be short and have brown hair, or any combination of physical characteristics.

I'll "know" my girl by the kind things she says about people, the way her smile reveals her happiness inside, and the way her face lights up when she sees me. The reason I can describe what she'll be like in such detail is because these are the things I could never compromise on when it comes to my one love.

I mean, I love long, shiny hair on a girl—it really turns me on. But if I met a girl who had all the virtues I've mentioned and if we sent an electricity between one another when we were together, then hair length would be the last thing in the world on my mind! •

It's the real thing when I can say "I love you" in a way I've never said it before. Love, to me, is something to be shared. I try to share the love I feel inside with all my fans. I try to express my
