

Until the very end, none of us could say for sure. He was coming or he wasn't coming! We knew that David Cassidy had planned the BRAVO editorial office as a stop on his trip to Europe. But he couldn't yet give us a firm commitment. Moreover, to avoid any hype, the plan was kept from the press like a state secret. On Friday, June 27, the clarifying call finally came from London: "I'll be with you on Sunday," David said.

We had come up with a special gag for his arrival in Munich: We weren't waiting for him at the airport in a luxury limousine, but in a chartered bus. BRAVO Magical Mystery Tour was written on the outside of the bus, accompanied by a Beatles song. Half the editorial team was waiting for David at the airport and drove with him on the bus across Munich to the editorial building. And nobody on the streets had any idea what a celebrity passenger was on the bus.

We hadn't seen David for a year. We knew that he had cut off his hair, that he had spent a long time in Australia and Hawaii, that he had changed his record company and wanted to do something completely new. Had he changed? And how! When he sat opposite us in the editorial office wearing colorful patchwork trousers, tennis shoes, a light-colored jacket with a large daisy in the buttonhole - we were all amazed. Because during his European tour a year ago, David seemed tense, a bit under pressure. None of that today: he answers our questions in a relaxed, cheerful and relaxed manner. And he is bubbling over with news. First of all, the most striking thing: his hair is almost back to its old length. And he had brought his brand new LP with him. We heard a completely new Cassidy. But it wasn't just his musical style that was different - the openness with which he spoke about himself, his past and his future was also completely new. You'll find out all about it in the next issue.
