

David's first great love

Here you can find out all the details of the most surprising and romantic love story of the year: David Cassidy has fallen in love with US actress Kay Lenz:

What kind of girl is this that has completely turned David's head? Whom he secretly sent red roses and traveled 10,000 km to London to follow because he couldn't stand it anymore because of his longing?

Main Photo - Beaming with happiness: David Cassidy and Kay Lenz show the world how much they love each other

You only do something like that out of love: David Cassidy arrived at London's Heathrow Airport directly from Los Angeles, completely unexpectedly, without luggage, but with a beautiful fox coat under his arm. The reason for David's lightning visit was sitting in London's Westbury Hotel, eagerly awaiting a call from America: Kay Lenz, film actress and David's secret girlfriend for a few weeks, had already resigned herself to spending her 24th birthday on March 4 alone. Without David! And then a beaming David suddenly appeared at the door. The welcome was indescribable. They both fell into each other's arms, had tears of joy in their eyes and couldn't take their eyes off each other. "Kay is my first great love," David confessed overjoyed, "I just couldn't stand it any longer because of my longing, so I flew here head over heels." Who is the girl who so suddenly captured David's heart?

Kay Lenz was born in Los Angeles on March 4, 1953, is 1.57 m tall, has beautiful brown eyes, dark blonde hair and is considered the big upcoming movie star in Hollywood. She came to London for the premiere of her latest film "The great Scout and Cathouse Thursday", in which Kay plays alongside such famous stars as Lee Marvin and Oliver Reed. After David followed her, the two also appeared at official events as an inseparable couple in love. When Kay Lenz rode up to the premiere on a white horse, David sat behind her in the saddle... The two had met briefly at a party in Los Angeles in January. "I really wanted to see Kay again, but I didn't know how to go about it," says David Cassidy. "So my personal photographer and friend Henry Diltz, who was well acquainted with Kay, helped out. Henry arranged a dinner at the Via Fettucini restaurant in Hollywood..." "But it certainly wasn't love at first sight," Kay interrupts with a laugh. David was busy with his move from Encino to Montecito. He already felt sick after the appetizer; he had to go home." David, however, was hooked. He met up with Kay a few times, then flew to Hawaii alone for a vacation. During this time, Kay found a red rose in front of her house every day without a card or a name. Curious,

David gave this fox coat to Kay

David and Kay rode on horseback through the streets of London to Kay's film

she bombarded the florist with questions about the client. But he was stubborn: "I'm not allowed to reveal my customer's name." Kay continued to beg: "Just tell me one thing: is his name David?" The florist nodded. "That's typical of David," says Kay Lenz, whose name betrays her German ancestry. "He's as romantic and emotional as I've always wanted a boyfriend to be." Are they both already thinking ahead, perhaps even about getting married? "I haven't thought about it yet, let alone talked about it with Kay," says David, "but one thing is for sure: I've never been as in love as I am with Kay in my whole life..." In the next BRAVO: What David likes about Kay