

Bob Hope's "When You're Hot, You're Hot" duet with David Cassidy has had to be scrapped from Hope's special tonight and a less offending tune selected in its place.

What's offensive about that "When You're Hot" pop tune, you ask? Not a thing in the world to me, but you can see why it might be considered so to the Ford auto folks, who are sponsoring a hope special for the first time — when you consider the song is used for the Chrysler-Flymouth commercials.
