

'Best dressed' for 'Tootsie' role

Actor Dustin Hoffman, better known these days for his skirts than his trousers, was named Sunday to the Fashion Foundation of America's list of "best-dressed" men.

Hoffman was chosen because he was magnificently "dressed" in the film "Tootsie," in which he played an actor

Hoffman who posed as a woman, said John Tudor, chairman of the foundation's men's division.

The foundation, a garment trade group, annually chooses the best-dressed men in 10 categories. Hoffman topped the screen category.

Winner in the statesman category was President Reagan, who lost out last year to Helmut Schmidt of Germany.

Others named to the list included Herschel Walker, sports; Prince Philip of Great Britain, international fashion; Florida Gov. Bob Graham, government; Yonkers, N.Y., Mayor Angelo Martinelli, civic affairs; Perry Como, entertainment; New York real estate man Harry Helmsley, business; actor David Cassidy, now appearing on Broadway in "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," stage; and New York City newscaster Chuck Scarborough, communications.
