

'Partridge' matures

David Cassidy, another one-time star on the comeback trail, wants to make another television series, having moved back to the United States after living in London.

He hated his stint as the teenybopper idol of The Partridge Family, but that was way back in the early '70s when David was in his 20s. Now he says, "I'm kind of being looked on as a fresh face, and that feels good."

Cassidy recently finished a film, Instant Karma, which he says will be shown at the Cannes Film Festival.

He's also just done his first game-show guesting, on Win, Lose or Draw, tentatively scheduled for airing April 24. "It was fun. It was also a way to show people I'm alive and back in America."
