

David Cassidy's book hauls out his dirty linen

By GEORGEA KOVANIS
KNIGHT-RIDDER NEWSPAPERS

When he agreed to write a book about his life, David Cassidy also agreed to tell the truth.

"When you agree to tell the truth about something," Cassidy says during a telephone interview from Philadelphia, "you've got to say, 'I'm not going to tell a little lie here.'"

So, in C'mon Get Happy . . . Fear and Loathing on the Partridge Family Bus (Warner, $11.99) we learn that former teen heart-throb Cassidy:

- Once threw a cup of urine at some overzealous fans.
- Did a lot of drugs.
- Got kicked out of high school.
- Palled around with Don Johnson and then got blown off by the former Miami Vice star.
- Got cut out of his father's will.
- Had musical tastes that leaned more toward Jimi Hendrix rock than the bubblegum pop he was singing on The Partridge Family TV sitcom and on tour.
- Is embarrassed to admit he started the puka-shell necklace trend.
- Had a "semi-aborted sexual experience" with co-star Susan Dey.
- Slept around — a lot. (Regarding women: "I find them enchanting creatures. . . . I enjoy giving them attention," Cassidy says in the book. "The difference between me now and me in my early 20s is I enjoy giving a lot more than I enjoy receiving. . . .")

Whew.

LIBRARY

David Cassidy and Petula Clark pose last year during rehearsals for the Broadway musical Blood Brothers.

CASSIDY BECAME an idol when he was cast to play happy-go-lucky Keith Partridge on the 1970s ABC-TV series The Partridge Family. For a while, he was hotter than fire.

Then the show went off the air in 1974. Cassidy went into the deep freeze. After years of nothingness, he re-emerged last year, in a kitschy sort of way, when Nickelodeon began showing Partridge Family reruns.

His book, co-authored with Chip Deffaa, concentrates heavily on his teen idol years, and sounds a lot like therapy.

CELEB

It's full of unflattering anecdotes (sex with groupies), situations un-glamorous to a teen idol (gallbladder surgery) and rationalizations that are amazing coming from an adult.

Consider this one:

"Every 20 minutes that I could get free would be spent with women. In my dressing room, in the lot, in my car, anywhere. This was not out of boredom," he writes. "This was out of having no life."

AT LEAST Cassidy, 44, is being honest. And that's the whole point.

Cassidy says he wrote the book to get everything out in the open so he can move on. And he has, actually, enjoying success and a People magazine cover from his role in Blood Brothers on Broadway and writing the theme song to The John Larroquette Show. Cassidy even has a TV pilot in the works.

Plus, he says, he wanted to document the '60s lifestyle he lived with such gusto.

"If you were alive anytime during the period of 1965 to, let's say, 1980, the world was a vastly different place than any other time in this century," Cassidy says.

"Those 15 years were, from a social standpoint, the loosest, most reckless, wildest period of time. . . . I was in my peak wildest, jerkiest period of time."

Thank you, David, for sharing. □