

C'mon, get happy

TV movie tells darker side of David Cassidy's fame

By BOB THOMAS
The Associated Press

They sit side by side on a couch in a suburban California living room, one a veteran of the show business wars, the other at the beginning of his acting career.

David Cassidy, 49, became a huge star of the 1970s as the teen heartthrob on TV's "The Partridge Family" and as a rock singer who sold millions of records and headlined sellout concerts.

Andrew Kavovit, 26, appeared as Paul Ryan on the soap opera "As the World Turns," spent two seasons on "The Magnificent Seven" and played roles on TV series and movies.

THE DAVID CASSIDY STORY

9 p.m. Sunday

NBC television
network

Their connection? Kavovit stars in the title role of "The David Cassidy Story," an NBC movie airing at 9 p.m. Sunday.

Based on his 1994 autobiography, "C'mon, Get Happy . . . Fear and Loathing on the Partridge Family Bus," the movie tells of Cassidy's attempt to deal with his overwhelming fame and his struggle to win the love of his distant father, Broadway star Jack Cassidy.

David Cassidy served as executive producer, but says he made no effort to sugarcoat the movie's portrayal of his trials and tribulations.

"There's a lot of sadness, a lot of emptiness and loneliness and feeling lost and being robbed of my own identity," he said. "The journey to find happiness while bringing happiness to millions of people was very difficult."

Kavovit, who has acted since he was 10, admitted that he came to the project knowing nothing about David Cassidy. "I was too young to be in the middle of the Partridge thing," he said.

"I wasn't so much interested in the fact that he had been in 'The Partridge Family' or even had the success as a musician. It was the relationship with the father and the emotional ties he had with certain people in his life. It was the real-life part of him that interested me, not the sensational life."

The resemblance between the pair, who were interviewed at an associate's home in Sherman Oaks, is minimal. But Cassidy says he wasn't seeking a lookalike but for someone who could look convincing at 40 as well as 19.

The film portrays the boy's anguish when his father (played by Malcolm McDowell) left David's mother to marry Shirley Jones (Dey Young in the movie).

David Cassidy

.....

She and David starred in "The Partridge Family," which appeared on ABC from 1970 to 1974. At 19, David was a big star, and that added to the gulf between father and son.

"My father was a manic-depressive and an alcoholic," Cassidy declared. "He had struggled with being Mr. Shirley Jones for a number of years. Although the entertainment industry thought of him as a great talent and he won the Tony and was nominated for Emmys, he never had the film career he wanted."

David Cassidy found himself broke and jobless after "The Partridge Family" folded, his onetime fans having moved on to other favorites. After a rough period, he began rebuilding his career, appearing in television drama and in the theater, notably in Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."